I started Swasthya Wave Foundation in early 2024 with a simple goal — to make health awareness easy and accessible for everyone. As a nursing student, I noticed that people around me often ignore small health issues due to lack of correct knowledge. So, I decided to use social media as my classroom and create short, engaging videos to spread awareness about common diseases, mental health, hygiene, and basic first aid.

All my videos are made in simple Hinglish so that even a common person can understand them. Through my Instagram page @madico92, I have shared several short reels covering topics like “How to identify early symptoms,” “When to visit a doctor,” “Simple hygiene habits,” and “How to handle fever and cold safely at home.”

Till now, my awareness videos have reached more than 20,000+ people with over 6.3K reach per post and nearly 300+ comments from viewers who appreciated the initiative. Many followers said the information helped them handle minor illnesses more confidently.

Even without a big team, I've managed to stay consistent with creating awareness videos, taking references from verified medical sources, and cross-checking facts before sharing. My aim is to create a bridge between medical knowledge and common understanding.

In the next phase, I plan to collaborate with my college peers to expand Swasthya Wave Foundation's offline reach — conducting small awareness drives in nearby communities and villages around Patna.

This initiative represents my belief that every student can become a small wave of change — spreading health, awareness, and hope.
